Identifying a product in a supermarket nowadays is no big deal, especially because all of them are equipped with some kind of unique code that scanners use to reveal their identity. Making such codes and labels requires specialized applications, such as Label Spirit Professional, capable of creating and printing out multiple labels in short time. Create a table of data to use The application comes with a rich set of features and in order for you not to feel overwhelmed, its split into two components, one that holds data, and another to design and export labels. By default, you're taken into the data collector, but the label designer is easily accessible. Visual design is kept to a minimum so that you easily find functions you need. the upper toolbar is home to most of them, while the center area is where all data goes. In addition, a side panel provides a preview of the page layout, as well as the label design. The data collector is nothing more than a spreadsheet stripped of function support. In other words, a set of rows and columns keep custom bits of info that are then used to print out multiple labels. Editing is easily done by writing inside each cell, or you can import TXT files that contain info you need. Customization and export options When you're done, it's time to create the label itself. Double-clicking the preview label opens it up in the editor. You can discard the current layout and start working on a new preset, but it can take some time to start from scratch. The label designer is fitted with various visual design tools so you can add pictures, shapes, and other objects to enhance the label, while other options and panels are used to configure what data to use from the spreadsheet and how to use it. Although it can seem a little complicated, all you need to do is drag elements, data, and variables over the canvas in the desired spot, with each new label coming out with a different cell info so no duplicates are created. In terms of export options, you can save label designs for later use under the application specific format. Moreover, it's possible to save an image to check the design with others. When it's finally done, the print function can take care of the rest. On an ending note Taking everything into consideration, we can say that Label Spirit Professional is sure to come in handy for creating multiple tags for different products. It greatly saves you time by automatically grabbing data from the

Create and design labels as quick and easy as possible. Use our auto design software to create high quality label templates quickly, insert images from your local hard drive or even our online image library and print them out effortlessly. Graphical design panel: Numerous design panel styles to choose from including Circle, square, and lines, as well as options for text alignment, font sizes, font types, etc. Generate from cell values: You can generate from cell values by allowing the software to read from specific cells within a cell reference range. For example, if you ask it to generate from cell E1 to E1000 then the software will search for a range of rows or a range of columns, depending on which text boxes you designate. Image services: Exchange and browse the web to find the best images for your labels right from within the application. We support our own image library and services including images from Flickr, AddThis, and more. Simply search the text inside the design panel and images will begin to appear. Image caching: When you have a lot of images to insert and only want to insert them once into your label design, you can set the program to cache the images, which means the program uses memory to store the images until they are needed again. In addition, the software will search through the image cache automatically if the program has not been run in a specific amount of time. Previewing: View the previews of your designs at any stage of the process. You can select a design by clicking in the preview canvas or simply double-click on any cell inside your template, to view the preview of the current design within the designated cell. Print layouts: Choose to print the entire layout or certain specific pages to generate multiple labels with a single click. You can also print individual labels, if you wish. Customization and error handling: You can design your own layouts or choose from our multitude of pre-designed label layouts to make the process even faster. The software handles the various errors that may occur, automatically informing you if there is a problem, and then offering suggestions on how to resolve it. Armed with the help of these features, our application helps you create multiple labels in a very short time. This genre of software is one of our favorites because of all of the different applications that fall under the Headspace category. We're referring to the types of programs that require you to perform complex tasks or present you with data, and then
