sound like. Creating this image can be hard, especially with many different factors to consider. A quick self-test of audio media is necessary before going any further. This test can be made by playing through the audio file you are about to work on. Go through your audio file to ensure the file plays correctly and that there are no problems with the audio file. The following list identifies potential problems: An audio file is not the correct format. The most common issue is using MP3 files when you need WAV files or vice versa. Often, this results in a file that plays back with broken audio. The audio file is damaged. Open the file in a quality audio editor

(such as Audacity) and see if the waveform displays correctly. If so, then the problem is not with the file but is more likely in your audio editor. Check the sounds inside the file by looking for any missing parts or audio files that are not playing. You can't hear the audio. It is possible that you have turned down the volume or audio is turned off. You hear strange noises. These may be humming and clicks, indicating a problem with the audio file. Your playback settings are not correct. Playback files should not be set to the wrong audio format or bit rate. For example, a 44.1K bitrate file shouldn't be played at 48K bit rate. Depending on your experience, you may or may not be able to grasp how each audio file should sound and what the final product should sound like. This is normal. There is more than enough material to get your creative juices flowing, and it's important to relax, have some fun, and feel free to be creative. In this chapter, you'll examine one of the most important aspects of audio editing: capturing and recording sound. Capturing Sounds Getting audio captured is one of the most important parts of audio recording. I recommend that you get a microphone that requires no more than five seconds of setup, including changing the volume to avoid using too much of your working time for the process of getting the sound. Before you start capturing audio, you need to make sure you have a good Efficacy of a first-generation PCSK9 inhibitor in patients with heterozygous familial hypercholesterolemia and statin intolerance or non-response: 12-month results from the FOURIER trial. PCSK9 (proprotein convertase subtilisin/kexin type 9) inhibitors reduce low-density lipoprotein (LDL)-cholesterol (C). We assessed the effect of evolocumab on lipids in patients with heterozygous familial hypercholesterolemia (HeFH) and statin intolerance, or non-response, and whether the response was affected by the PCSK9 mutational subtype. In the FOURIER (FOrcery Of protein-cysKine Inhibition Evaluation in Renal disease) trial, adults with HeFH (n = 1433) were randomized to 12 months of double-blind, placebo-controlled, repeat treatment with evolocumab 420 mg Q4W or 420 mg Q2W. Preplanned subgroup analyses of the HeFH cohort for change in mean lipid levels were performed in pts stratified by PCSK9 mutational subtype [rs1410996 (E167D), rs7566605 (I384V), both combined], and type of response to statin-based therapy [any statin treatment response (ATS)]. Evolocumab was associated with significant, dose-dependent reductions in

LDL-C, apolipoprotein B, and non-high-density lipoprotein C (non-HDL-C). Patients treated with 420 mg Q4W had significantly lower LDL-C (-49.1%) and apolipoprotein B (-24.5%) than placebo in all patients [Evo420 (EvoQ4W) vs. placebo] (P ≤ 0.0021 for both). Compared with placebo, evolocumab reduced LDL-

C by 42.6% and apolipoprotein B by 30.5% in the E167D-allele group and 61.7% and 59.3% in the I384V-allele group (P
