of a Doublemind Project, part two Robinson: The Journey of a Doublemind Project, part two I returned to the therapy circle, idled a minute waiting for the third crow to settle in at the window before I leapt up, flew fifty feet up, grabbed his tail, and without preamble raked my claws across his leg. As he rocketed away, I noticed my arms were wrapped around the neck of another crow, who, uninterested in my flailing legs and waving arms, calmly pecked his head as if idling his dinner. Thrashing wildly, I grabbed the second crow and held onto his feathers as he stared at me with absolutely no interest whatsoever. When the first crow found my grim-faced colleague wandering toward the birds' roosting tree, he screwed around him, letting go long enough to stab his pointy claw into his side and out the eye of our hopeful therapy participant. As we left, the crow hopped back on my shoulder and relaxed, mumbling to itself "I'm just going for a bit of a...flitterfloozie...had to let them know I was here." There was a lot of tension yesterday that was summed up by a group member walking

People's reactions were always held hostage to their feelings of personal comfort and sometimes that was more obvious than a few days before. The thing that really stood out for me was the 50/50 split that the people in our group came from. With 50% of the folks looking to blow their lids up at the drop of a hat and 50% of us who could sit still and stay calm even under the most trying circumstances. We had days that were incredibly difficult, but the mornings started with choosing whether we'd fly or walk, ending with people saying something like, "I can't even believe that this morning I managed to sit still and calm down. I think I'll take a minute to myself." Shannon's going home this afternoon and I wanted to say hello to Aaron and Megan. As I flew toward our neighboring nest, we perched at the first tree on our route, and Aaron began to sing. Such a song: anxious, beautiful, and layered, it exuded a deep understanding that "me," "you," and "this"

I've been a fan of his work since about 2006. I seem to have been one of the few people who had an issue with Fantastic Mr. Fox, and I had a chance to sit down and talk to him about it. He was lovely. I told him I loved Rushmore. He said he's seen it like a million times and doesn't remember most of it. To this day I still love that movie and it is one of my favorite films of all time. I started sending Anderson letters to tell him how much I adored The Darjeeling Limited and The Life Aquatic with Steve Zissou. He hasn't responded to me, and I don't even know if he's read the things I've written about his movies, but I love them so much, and I think he's made some of the most exceptional movies of the past decade, so I thought I'd reach out to him and ask if he'd ever want to collaborate on anything. He didn't, but in the years since then he's made four more movies. Then I posted a video on my blog, sharing this poem by Williams on a friend's Facebook page, and said maybe he'd like to do something. And lo and behold, two months later he did. Wes Anderson and I have had a long and fruitful collaboration, and this is the product of it. It's a little bit more austere, serious, and meditative than a traditional Anderson movie
