A coupling-efficient coherent beam generator based on the use of a galvanometric mirror and a phase-only liquid-crystal spatial light modulator is proposed.

By implementing the desired general-optical transformation in the spatial-light-modulator using a single operating voltage, both the spectral bandwidth and the fine-grained phase-shift of the incident light are decoupled from each other, leading to a compact, robust, and low-cost device. The results show that the proposed scheme can be efficiently used to produce an entangled two-photon state.Q: Enabling RDF in asp.net? I'm trying to enable RDF in my asp.net webforms application. My goal is to have the server render RDF. For that, I found this article and attached a link in a comment below. The same question is posted by someone in another thread here. I've created a new class library project as suggested in this blog post. I went to the config file and added these key-value pairs:

His purpose was to "make every man after a fashion (and particularly the men I have known) love one another for his and their own sakes" (p. 404). Rabelais wanted to "exalt" and to the contrary, "spoil" this "jolly and merry animal, Man" (p. 404). His characters are "sons of thunder" and play pranks on one another, "each to his own kind, wherewith they all jostle one another" (p. 404). Rabelais had a "thirst" for the "wickedness" of life (p. 405). He desired to "lower the dignity of human nature" (p. 405). He wanted to create "whippersnappers" (p. 405). He wished to make man "a sorry clown" (p. 405). Pantagruel played for keeps. He would beat up and "pile on" (p. 406) his overgrown opponents. Another of his desires was that he "invert the order of nature" (p. 406). He wanted to "invert the order of nature in the order of our thoughts" (p. 406). In Pantagruel, the physical realities are "inverted" in the mental world, as shown by the way that the characters "discover" their "mothers" at the age of 13 (p. 406). For Rabelais, "nature" was a "mistake" of God. "As the male body is imperfect and degenerate, so is the soul of man; the other imperfect and degenerate" (pp. 408-409). Rabelais saw the human body as a "pigsty" (p. 410). Man's body was "an ugly, foolish, and distressed affair" (p. 411). The body was "hideous" (p. 412), "filthy" (p. 413), "mean and squalid" (p. 413), "incapable" (p. 414), "solitary, empty, and self-engrossed" (p. 414), "unhappy" (p. 414), "rusty, soured, rotten, lamed, drunk, dirty, and full of melancholy" (p. 414). This and other bodily defects made Rabelais feel like a "poor fellow" (p. 414), who would like "to
