While both of these locks share some functionality, a knob lock acts differently than a deadbolt. Let's take a closer look at both. A Deadbolt Lock Most conventional residential and commercial locks on the market are deadbolt locks. These locks are installed with a keyed cylinder that rotates a bolt, a set of teeth that hold the bolt in place. Unlike deadbolts that require a key to open, knob locks can be opened with a key or a combination. A Knob Lock A knob lock is similar to a deadbolt lock, but instead of a key, a series of levers—called a knob—is used to move the bolt. When combined with a lock cylinder, the levers allow the door to be opened or closed without the use of a key. When to Use a Deadbolt Lock Most of the time, a deadbolt is used to secure a primary door lock, or a door with only one lock. These deadbolts are easier to operate with a key and are less likely to be picked than knob locks. When to Use a Knob Lock A knob lock is primarily used to secure a secondary door lock or a double door lock. These locks are opened with a key when anyone other than the owner of the lock is trying to enter. Unlock the Deadbolt Unlocking a deadbolt is typically done using a key.
