Q: GitHub: Merge branch'master' into 'name' My understanding is that when branching a repository, the base is looked at is master. Whenever someone makes a commit to master, their branch becomes 'name' including all the commits up until that point. What would be the correct way to merge 'name' back to'master', assuming it doesn't conflict? A: This should cover what you need: basename git checkout master git merge name git checkout name git rebase master RickyB90 suggests a visualization of a typical merge, that may help (with diagrams come at the cost of a more complicated text): How To Draw A Merge Commit A: I have a minor cludge on top of basename method to avoid having a hard break when switching branches, because sometimes the fix is just a one-liner, and I don't want to end up in the latter half of a branch (you wouldn't want to do that with basename either... half your commits are missing): git branch collapse name && git merge --squash --no-commit master && git rebase --interactive master && git branch -f name && git checkout name git rebase master git branch
