relates to a hinge for connecting the hinge bracket to a door panel. Generally, the hinge bracket is installed on the door panel so that the hinge bracket is orthogonal to the door panel by the supporting member secured to the door panel. The supporting member is adapted to support the weight of the door panel. The door panel is required to be sufficiently strong to stand the loads applied to it by the supporting member, which may be caused by a wind loading or a load applied to the door from the outside of the door. In the conventional hinge, the hinge bracket is generally connected to the supporting member of the door panel by one or more support pins. In such a conventional hinge, the support pin(s) must be removed or broken to facilitate the replacement of the hinge bracket. This takes time and, therefore, has been a problem. The invention disclosed in the copending application Ser.
No. 065,191 is an improvement of the conventional hinge as disclosed in Japanese Utility Model application 57-64485 filed on Apr. 5, 1982 and laid open to the public on May 15, 1984 under No. 3-9502. The invention of the application Ser. No. 065,191 has no support pin to be removed for the hinge bracket of the door panel. The invention disclosed in the application Ser. No. 065,191 can be used in the hinge with support pin. 296 N.E.2d 703 (1973) Michael F. UHAS, Respondent, v. Robert E. BERNHARD, et al., Appellants. No. 1271A271. Some aspects of the use of bioactive and biocompatible polysaccharides in the nanocomposite technology have been reviewed, focusing on the nanofibrous mats and films. Biodegradable polysaccharides such as alginate, starch, cellulose and chitosan and non-biodegradable polysaccharides such as carrageenan, chondroitin sulphate, heparin, gellan, carboxymethyl cellulose, agarose and hyaluronic acid have been widely used for the preparation of nanofibrous mats and films. Particularly, alginate and sodium alginate have been used to produce many kinds of bioactive and biocompatible nanofibrous mats and films. Their mechanical properties and bioactivity have been improved by changing the structure of the polymers. Furthermore, these biocompatible nanofibrous mats and films can be used for the controlled release of drugs and/or enzymes for biomedical purposes.

Carboxymethyl cellulose (CMC) nanofibrous mats have been used for the enzyme immobilization. Carboxymethyl chitosan (CMC-chitosan) nanofibrous mats and films have been used for the controlled release of methotrexate (MTX). The CMC-chitosan nanofibrous mats and films showed good biocompatibility, biodegradability and swelling property.
