A prisoner has been sentenced to life imprisonment. During his first night in prison, he meets a friendly "family" of prisoners. This family promises to help him return to his old life, by performing a "service" on his behalf. The prisoners agree to contact a call center the prisoner selects, and find out which one is assigned to him. The prisoner gets to select a desired number, and the call center operator opens up a large box and places a microphone inside. The prisoner then picks a number inside that box, then delivers a message to the operator. If a prisoner wishes to communicate with someone he will have a long wait. If a prisoner wishes to communicate with someone he will have no wait. If the prisoner does not wish to communicate with someone, he can just wait. Now this is where it gets tricky. The prisoner is not allowed to communicate with anyone else, so the prisoner has to hide the fact that the prisoner's intentions to communication with a certain number. For example, the prisoner may yell "Hey!" to a prisoner with a different number from the number that the prisoner has been assigned. Or, the prisoner may start a conversation with a person that is not the number the prisoner has been assigned. To "hide" the prisoner's intentions from the person that the prisoner is communicating with, the prisoner cannot talk directly
